Module 3

Resourcing learning effectively

Look at an array of 'places and spaces' for learning and the degree to which each can support flexible, hybrid, and fully online/offline experiences.

Introduction

Identifying the 'location' of this module within the course level learning will spark the introduction of module theories being considered (time vs security of resources). Three students are introduced to the participants, who will share their experience learning within technology-enabled spaces. There will be a 'pick your own adventure' to see what happens with each learner in different scenarios of 'current practice'. This will set participants up for later 'doors and windows' activity.

Expansion

Here we will look at an array of 'places and spaces' for learning and the degree to which each can support i) flexible, ii) hybrid, and iii) fully online/offline experiences.

Refinement/ Application

Here we will look to the classroom as both virtual AND place-based. The students are introduced to the faculty members from Module two. A few scenarios of teachers and students experiencing IN activity are presented with 'doors' and 'windows' presenting resulting effects (locked out, access from bus, etc).

Community of Inquiry (COI)

Participants are asked to share potential 'doors' and 'windows' in their own course, and their plans for change as a result of the module experience. Also share plans that will be protected as a result of the module experience. Provide an artifact if possible (checklist, job aid, tips sheet, etc).

I am a technology literate student! I help out teachers and my peers with tech stuff. Sometimes I even find glitches in the matrix on my own (and report them to instructors).
