Mini Assignment- Module 3

From one of the Module readings, Joel Bervell points out that Black athletes and he talks about how unfair it is to reduce Black achievements to stereotypes, ignoring the effort and skill involved. This reflects a deeper racial bias in how we perceive athletic success.

I had this in mind so I thought of working on my assignments by searching for something related to this, so I chose the TV show Survivor's Remorse (2014-2017). In this TV show it shows a basketball player Cam who faces the challenges of being a black athlete, and uses the platform for activism.

The player in the show expresses her thoughts on the unjust anger frequently directed towards his race, it shows the similarity of the other article from the reading that talks about misogynoir by Rajack and Joseph. He shows that he will not allow her identity to be diminished to stereotypes regarding Black athleticism and aggression. He didn't allow the media to portray him the way they wanted. The show portrays how a black race is often judged by others and how their each move is being watched by others.

He uses the platform of being an athlete to use it to confront matters that are overshadowed by the society which includes race, gender, and class. His activism in the program emphasizes the pressure Black athletes frequently experience all over the world.
